And on the pillow cases, ink spilled ink spreading across the pillow cases, and words spreading across the paper.

And across the desert:
Spilled.

Can you see it amidst
the dunes?

Always more ink,
always trying to cover
and conceal just how fragile glass can be.
